Why you need to take control

The Government advice and guidance is constantly in a state of flux at the moment, and whilst they are doing their utmost to get this right it is a moving target. More importantly what is right for one organisation may not be right for another.

The Government have created a number of articles to assist, if you go onto our web site <http://immsuite.com> you will find one of their articles; “Working safely during COVID-19 in offices and contact centres”. The majority of this document is around cleaning, however, whilst cleaning is important it is not everything.

Our research suggests that whilst firms are aware of the problems the vast majority still have no defined strategy on how they will return to work safely. Organisations need to take back control and define a comprehensive strategy for returning to work. IM&M and its partners are there to help and we have both the physical and human tools to guide and support you and your employees through a strategy that works.

So, what do you need to do to take control:

1. Firstly, engage with your employees and work out who wants to return to the office and who wants to continue working from home. One of our partners, Actimo provide tools to create engagement with your staff remotely and they also help you to implement, manage and monitor employee engagement effectively.
2. Continue to provide employees with tips like how to manage anxiety, from using public transport to returning to the office and most importantly keep communication relevant.
3. IM&M can demystify the Government advice and help you to create a safe, secure, and manageable environment for your employees to return to. If you want to ensure and monitor social distancing, there are tools and sensors that are non-intrusive that can be implemented quickly and efficiently.
4. Visibility and control is probably the two most important elements of a safe return to the workplace, without this you don't know what you have, where it is or how it is being used and this is a receipt for issues to occur. IM&M stands for investigate, manage, and maximise providing visibility and control of any size or sectors organisation infrastructure.

Do not leave it to the Government or anyone else, you need to take control now, working with organisations like IM&M and their partners we can show you how to take back control of this pandemic and not only survive but prosper.
